Prepare for a HIGHER Level of Learning!

Success in Economics at U of T requires more than just attending lectures, reading the textbook, and taking good lecture notes. Those of you who have taken Economics in high school may think you have an advantage, but beware. What you most likely have is a false perception of understanding. As one student who took OAC economics said after he wrote his first Eco100 Test, "I was walking around like I knew everything, then got smashed!"

The reality is that the class average is usually a "C". That means most people will get less than a "B", and many will fail. The reason is that the Eco100 tests at U of T go far beyond the textbook and what is taught in lectures. The tests will force you to apply your knowledge, which is far different from high school which largely forced you to regurgitate information (i.e. memorization). Thus the recipe for success in high school will not work in university. I am not trying to scare anyone but instead give you a "heads up" about the reality. So change your strategy now, don't wait and risk getting a poor grade!!

The secret to Success

PRACTICE! That's right! You must practice DOING economic problems. Only by doing problems can you be assured you understand the material. Which problems are best to practice from? OLD TESTS! Study from old tests! Study from old tests! Study from your Profs old tests! Not because these questions will be repeated (likely won't happen). Rather you will be practicing from the best set of questions. Agree? The old tests will force you to apply the concepts. It will test your understanding. And since each Prof has different tests it allows you to see their style of questions and allows you to focus on what's important. So get your Prof's tests, as many as possible, and start practicing. Do not wait till the last minute. So success, or increased probability of success, is simple. If you can do the old tests then you're ready.

ANOTHER SECRET

If you're pressed for time, or find it too difficult, or just want to learn it faster & easier, then come to ECO MAN, I'll explain this stuff from scratch.
